Brookfield Asset Management

Brookfield Asset Management closed its first infrastructure debt fund at $885 million, above its $700 million target. The vehicle will target primarily mezzanine debt investments for North America. The firm is also planning to launch a European counterpart.

“Investor appetite for infrastructure debt strategies continued to grow in 2018, given the attractive risk-adjusted returns and exposure to infrastructure which, among other real asset investments, is attracting a growing proportion of portfolio allocations,” Brookfield Infrastructure Group managing director Hadley Peer-Marshall (pictured) said.

“Heading into 2019, we anticipate investors will continue to deploy capital into infrastructure debt in order to diversify while providing yield, particularly as investors are becoming more familiar with the asset class and there are a greater number of strategies with track records available.”
