Brookfield to Invest Tens of Billions in Germany Over the Next Five Years

Investment to focus on energy, digital infrastructure and industrial businesses critical to Germany's long-term growth and competitiveness

NEW YORK & Berlin – October 19, 2026 – Ahead of the 2026 Invest in Germany Summit in Berlin, Brookfield today announced plans to invest tens of billions in Germany over the next five years. Brookfield's investment activities will focus on energy, digital infrastructure and industrial businesses, sectors critical to Germany's economic growth and long-term competitiveness.

Bruce Flatt, CEO of Brookfield Corporation, said: "Germany is a core market for Brookfield, and we see compelling opportunities to invest in the sectors that will drive its future growth and competitiveness. As a trusted strategic partner to leading businesses, institutions and governments globally, we bring together long-term capital, scale and operating expertise to deliver the critical infrastructure and industrial capacity that economies depend on. We look forward to bringing these capabilities to bear as we expand our investments in Germany."

Germany's strong industrial foundations, skilled workforce and position at the heart of Europe make it an attractive destination for long-term investment. Structural trends including digitalization, AI, industrial development and electrification are creating significant demand for energy and essential infrastructure, which are all areas that Brookfield leads globally. With German electricity demand expected to expand significantly at the same time as existing generation capacity nears retirement, private capital can play a critical role in helping to close this investment gap, delivering the reliable, affordable energy infrastructure needed to support Germany's industrial competitiveness.

Brookfield has been investing in Germany since 2013 and today has approximately €30 billion of investments across energy, digital infrastructure, logistics, real estate and other essential businesses. Its investments include a partnership with Deutsche Telekom on 5G Towers, Sunovis, a German solar developer, and a leading student and young professional living platform. The firm opened a new office in Frankfurt in 2023, reinforcing its long-term commitment to Germany as a core growth market, enhancing its ability to serve clients across the region and supporting the continued expansion of its investment activities.
